Surcharge to Be Lifted Japan Agrees to Limit Textile Exports to U.S.

By Fred Farris WASHINGTON, Oct. 15 (UPI).—The White House announced today that Japan had agreed to limit noncotton textile exports to the U.S. and, in consequence, the 10 percent surcharge on such imports would be lifted.

Japan bowed to intense American pressure in agreeing to the textile curbs. Representatives of the United States and Japan initiated a memorandum of understanding today in Tokyo, culminating a bitter three-year-old wrangle that drove U.S.-Japanese relations to a low point.

Taiwan, South Korea and Hong Kong also have agreed to curb their textile shipments to the United States, the White House said. The surcharge exemption will apply to all countries, not just the four agreeing to the import quotas, but they are the major exporters of the goods involved.

The records represented a major victory for President Nixon, who promised American textile producers in 1968 he would limit Asian textile imports. But in Japan the agreement brought gloom and calls for the ouster of the government of Premier Eisaku Sato.

Mr. Nixon, who on Tuesday threatened unilateral U.S. action if an agreement were not reached by today, hailed the accord as "a hopeful sign for the continuation of good relations with Japan."

Japan's Minister of International Trade, Kakuei Tanaka, who initiated the agreement for his government, said: "Japan had to enter into a governmental arrangement in the new circumstance in order to avoid the worst influence toward Japan's textile exports to the United States, defend against the protectionist movement in the United States, and keep a long and friendly relationship between both countries."

Japanese Trade Ministry officials said the government would invoke its export trade control ordinance in order to bring Japanese shipments down to the levels provided for in the accord. The Japanese textile industry has observed voluntary restraints since July 1, but the United States considered these insufficient.

Nixon Sets Structures For Phase 2

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15 (WP).—President Nixon established today the machinery for Phase 2 of his economic program and said that it would provide "a more flexible and selective system of economic restraints" than has existed during the 90-day wage price freeze.

The freeze will be continued beyond the Nov. 13 expiration date, however, unless modified by the Pay Board and the Price Commission, still to be appointed. An executive order today (Continued on Page 2, Col. 4)

Greek Opposition Deplores Agnew Visit

By Peter Grose ATHENS, Oct. 15 (UPI).—Over 170 former members of the Greek parliament warned Vice-President Agnew today that his official visit tomorrow would only undermine Greek democracy and the security of the non-Communist world.

On another edge of the Ardoyne, half a mile from where the plainclothesmen died, snipers opened fire on two policemen near the Old Park police station tonight and hit a man passing by in the leg, the army said. The policemen were not hurt.

To Follow Congressional Order

Army Plans to Discharge 65,000 Before 1972

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15 (NYT).—The Army announced yesterday that it would release approximately 65,000 officers and enlisted men from active duty before July 1 to comply with a congressional order to cut its manpower to 822,000 for fiscal year 1972.

The Army's strength on July 1 was 1.12 million and 1,074,431 in August. This means that manpower levels in subsequent months would have to dip well below 892,000 to offset the surplus of those two months and bring the 12-month average into line.

The number of men entering the service averaged 10,000 a month, comprising about 1,000 officers and 9,000 enlisted men. The Army's attrition rate is between 100,000 a month.

Former Captain Ernest L. Medina displays his discharge Friday at Ft. McPherson.

Medina Gets His Honorable Discharge

FOOT MCPHERSON, Ga., Oct. 15 (UPI)—Capt. Ernest L. Medina, who resigned from the Army following his acquittal on charges in connection with the massacre at My Lai, was honorably discharged today and left saying he had "no animosity and no hard feelings."

He had been in the Army 16 years and had only years until retirement. "I didn't want to be behind a filing cabinet next four years."

Even before his discharge, Medina had a military career that included being a prisoner of war in North Vietnam.

U.S. Announces Withdrawal Of 4,650 Men From Vietnam

SAIGON, Oct. 15 (AP)—The U.S. command announced today an imminent withdrawal of 4,650 men, the second largest outback announced at one time since the U.S. pullout began in mid-1969.

At the same time, the command reported that an unarmed U.S. photo-reconnaissance plane was fired on over North Vietnam while making one of the deepest penetrations of the North this year.

A command spokesman, Capt. James D'Entremont, said the plane was fired on by anti-aircraft guns yesterday afternoon while 95 miles north of the Demilitarized Zone and 14 miles east of the Laos border.

Scientists Say Moon Sensors Detect Water Vapor Geyser

WASHINGTON, Oct. 15 (UPI)—Scientists say they have detected a cloud of water vapor on the moon, which they believe is a geyser.

The water vapor was vaporized instantly in the lunar vacuum. Dr. Freeman said the two instruments he used were probably have seen the water as a haze on the horizon.

The fact that the water cloud persisted so long and was seen to burst into a six-minute peak tells scientists that it could have been of natural origin.

Tass Reports Salyut Ceased Its Existence

MOSCOW, Oct. 15 (UPI)—The Soviet Union's orbiting space laboratory, Salyut, has finished its mission after nearly six months of flight, the official news agency, Tass, said today.

Tass said the earth-orbital station, which performed prolonged space experiments with the manned Soyuz-10 and Soyuz-11 ships last spring and summer, ended its existence Monday.

The Tass communiqué read: "After the station was oriented in space, its braking system was switched on and, as a result of deceleration, the station moved into a descending trajectory, entered the dense layers of the atmosphere over a pre-set area of the Pacific Ocean and ceased its existence."

Plea to Agnew By Mother of Greek Prisoner

ATHENS, Oct. 15 (Reuters)—The mother of Alexander Panagoulis has appealed to Vice-President Agnew to intervene with the Greek government to save her son from what she claimed was a slow death in prison.

Panagoulis, a former Greek Army private, was sentenced to death in 1968 for attempting to assassinate Premier George Papadopoulos, but, possibly because of the feared international reaction, the sentence has never been carried out.

In a letter to Mr. Agnew, who is due here on a visit tomorrow, Mrs. Athina Panagoulis said that she believed it would be better that her son was executed rather than kept alive under present conditions.

Lin Piao Said to Have Died In Air Crash as Coup Failed

HONG KONG, Oct. 15 (UPI)—A Hong Kong newspaper reported today that Chinese Vice-Chairman Lin Piao died in a plane crash in Mongolia last month while escaping from Peking after the failure of a coup d'etat.

The rightist Daily Express, quoting what it described as "people with connections in mainland China," said Lin Piao, the designated successor of Chairman Mao Tse-tung, "attempted to stage a coup d'etat to overthrow Mao during the National Day parade on Oct. 1."

"But the information leaked out and reached Mao," the Chinese-language newspaper said, "so the Chinese leader ordered cancellation of the National Day parade."

Ages Past Parade for the Shah's Guests

(Continued from Page 1) Nations, the shah was warmly congratulated by his guests. While the pageant dramatized Iran's past, there were reminders of present dangers in the helicopters that patrolled the surrounding hills to prevent attacks threatened by guerrillas.

Scholars kept busy Iranian scholars checked reference sources throughout the world—museums, manuscripts, sculpture and pottery—to make the pageant as authentic as possible. Musicologists reconstructed what they thought would have been the martial airs of the era of Cyrus and their dissonances sounded strangely modern.

The ceremonies opened with the delivery to the shah of a message of loyalty brought 150 miles from Tehran, the capital, by pony. The two horsemen who handed the scroll to the shah were dressed in the costumes worn when the Greek historian Herodotus visited this country in the fifth century B.C.

The crowd showed its greatest enthusiasm for such ancient engines of destruction as a siege tower drawn by 16 oxen and a trebuchet drawn on a float.

Selassie Praises Fete PERSEPOLIS, Oct. 15 (AP)—Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia said today he believed the Persepolis gathering would "contribute to the solution of many international problems." As he spoke, Vice-President Agnew, on the eve of his visit to Greece, was having a lengthy meeting with his exiled King Constantine II. They met in King Constantine's tent for an hour and 15 minutes. Details of their talks were not disclosed.

As Asians Try to Cut Losses Europe Fears Influx of Textiles

PARIS, Oct. 15 (IHT)—World textile officials had mixed reactions to today's agreement reached between the United States, Japan, Taiwan and Hong Kong. In Brussels, a Belgian textile-industry official said European nations would have to conclude similar export-limiting pacts with Asian nations. Otherwise, the official said, Europe could expect large inflows of Asian textiles from manufacturers trying to compensate for the limit placed on their U.S. sales.

Common Market officials welcomed the U.S. decision to drop its 10 percent import surcharge on noncotton textiles. They said, however, that they regretted that the move was prompted only by Japan's acceptance of voluntary quotas on its exports.

In Frankfurt, the West German Textile Industry Federation said it viewed the agreement with "mixed feelings." A federation spokesman welcomed the removal by the United States of the import surcharge for textiles, but, at the same time, voiced a fear that there will be an influx here of Asian textiles.

In London the British-made fibers and wool textile industries welcomed the U.S. announcement. A spokesman said the surcharge had caused a lot of anxiety among some manufacturers of man-made fiber products.

Japan Signs Pact With U.S. For Limit on Textile Exports

(Continued from Page 1) more than 70 percent. Had the limitation agreement not been reached, he said, such imports might have risen by another 28 percent next year.

Textile imports, the White House said, were the largest single contributor to the $9 billion U.S. trade deficit this year. It said the deficit in textile trade alone would be $2.15 billion, up sharply from last year's $1.54 billion shortfall.

Share of U.S. Market Japanese industry and union leaders, who strongly opposed the pact, cited U.S. government figures to support their claim that Japan's textile exports amounted to only 12 percent of the U.S. textile market in 1970, in terms of dollar value, and to only 2.7 percent in terms of volume.

The Ministry of International Trade predicted a decline from $750 million to $500 million a year in Japan's noncotton textile shipments to the United States.

Nixon Sets Structures For Phase 2

(Continued from Page 1) set up the organizational structure for the Phase 2 plans Mr. Nixon announced last week. Officials expressed the hope that the two panels could issue new guidelines before the expiration date, thus modifying the absolute bar against wage, price and rent changes.

The names of the panel members as well as the new legislation required to carry forward the President's program are expected to be announced early in the week, possibly Monday.

In Minneapolis, Walter Heller, former chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors, predicted a strong economic recovery next year that would yield a $100 billion advance in the gross national product. According to Mr. Heller, there will be a real growth rate of 6.5 percent in GNP and a 3 percent rise due to inflation.

Mr. Nixon's assistant for international economic affairs, Peter G. Peterson, told newsmen here that since 1969, employment in the U.S. textile industry has fallen by 100,000 jobs. By the end of this year, he said, the job loss would have hit 250,000 had the agreement not been reached.

Vilnius Jailings Reported

MOSCOW, Oct. 15 (Reuters)—Three Jews were jailed for terms of up to 15 days for "petty hooliganism" yesterday after they tried to petition the Communist party headquarters in Vilnius, Lithuania, for permission to emigrate to Israel, Jewish sources said here today.

Removal of the 10 percent import surcharge from textile imports is the first such rollback of the levy, which was imposed Aug. 15 as part of the President's new economic policy to strengthen the dollar. While it applies to all textile imports, shipments from non-Asian countries such as Britain have risen slowly and the protective device was not needed against them, Mr. Peterson said.

One American official reportedly commented on the signing in Tokyo: "This had to be done. One of our problems was that we lacked credibility. There was an unwillingness on the part of the Japanese to take some hard decisions because they didn't have to. We gained respect."

Mr. Stans said in Hot Springs, Va., where he is attending the semiannual meeting of the Business Council, that he was "extremely gratified at the success of the textile agreement." He said the curb was "absolutely necessary" since Japan's voluntary agreement to limit such exports had "clearly failed."

Panther Leader to Leave Soon Cleaver Says He'll Go to U.S. For Urban Guerrilla Battle

By Michael Goldsmith
ALGIERS, Oct. 15 (AP)—Self-styled Black Panther leader Eldridge Cleaver said today he has decided to return soon to the United States and devote himself to an urban guerrilla struggle against the capitalist establishment.

In an interview at his neat and comfortable villa on the heights overlooking Algiers, the 36-year-old revolutionary spoke bitterly of the Chinese decision to seek better relations with the United States, saying it helped to convince him that the "oppressed people" in the United States and other countries had no recourse except armed struggle by their own means.

He said he sent his wife, Kathleen, and their two children, Eldridge Jr., born in Algeria in 1969, and a girl born in North Korea last year, back to the United States earlier this week.

They were due to arrive in California today, where Kathleen intended to leave the children with Cleaver's mother in Alta Dena, and then join in the struggle.

Bit of Self-Indulgence
"It was a bit of self-indulgence to spend these past two years here with my son," Cleaver said. He and Kathleen have lived here since 1969 with a small subsidy from the Algerian government, which they used to set up the Black Panthers' "intercommunal headquarters."

Following his split with the other Panther leaders, Huey P. Newton and Bobby Seale, who remained in the United States, Cleaver resumed his section of the movement the Revolutionary People's Communications Network.

But the brass plaques engraved with a leaping panther are still on the gates of the villa. It would "oust the Algerian authorities" to disown the Panther connection, Cleaver said.

Speaking in cool, measured tones, the bearded Cleaver said, "My wife and children will be in the United States within a couple of hours. I am planning to follow them."

He asserted that his heart "is quite clearly in the United States" and he prolonged his Algerian exile only because of "the problems involved in running around the United States openly."

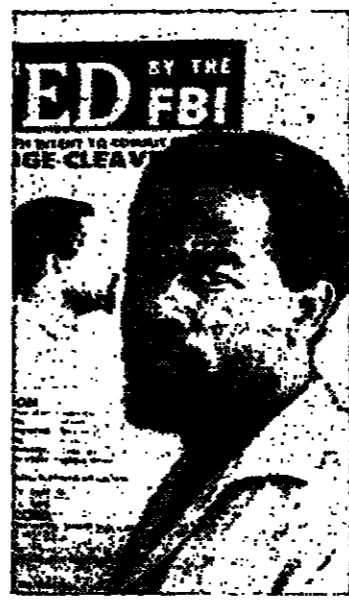

Not a Diplomat
Other followers would continue running the Algiers office after his departure, he said. "I'm tired of it. I'm not a diplomat. I don't want to have to shake somebody's hand and two or three days later he shakes the hand of (Ethiopian Emperor) Haile Selassie or Huey Newton."

When he planned to leave, he said with a wry smile: "I don't think it's wise to talk about when." But he left no doubt that it would be soon.

He denied that he was assuming the leadership of an underground revolutionary struggle in the United States.

"I am planning to make my contribution to it," he said. "I have never sought any leadership because it's a drag to be in a position of leader."

He said the Panther movement made a serious mistake in the past in disclaiming responsibility for shooting trays with the police. Like the guerrilla movements in Latin America, Quebec and Ireland, "we should have openly and proudly admitted the actions which we ourselves initiated," he declared.

Eldridge Cleaver.

House Votes to Create Agency To Defend Consumer Interests

By John D. Morris
WASHINGTON, Oct. 15 (NYT)—The House passed yesterday a bill to create an independent federal agency to advocate and defend consumer interests, particularly in regulatory proceedings before other federal agencies.

The vote was 344 to 44. The action followed an unsuccessful two-day fight by congressional allies of Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate, to broaden the powers of the proposed agency.

Prospects for Senate passage of a similar bill, described as "landmark" legislation by proponents, are regarded as excellent. Hearings are expected to be held early next month by a government operations subcommittee headed by Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D., Conn.

The House-approved measure would empower the new Consumer Protection Agency to intervene on behalf of the consumer in formal proceedings ranging from the promulgation of auto safety standards to the enforcement of food and drug laws.

How It Operates
The agency could participate as a full "party" unless the proceedings were initiated primarily to impose a fine or similar penalty for violation of a federal law. As a party, it could obtain subpoenas for the production of evidence, present its own witnesses and deposed Communist countries from charts listing figures about the world's leading arms exporters, Mr. Lahiguera said.

A Unesco official commented: "The Russians aren't denying the charges of censorship, but they are trying to transfer editorial responsibility for the magazine into a troika arrangement which would include a Communist editor, a Western editor and a neutral editor."

Instead, the Russians charged that a Unesco-financed magazine that printed an article on Soviet pollution was controlled by Americans, and proposed that its editorial board be altered to include a Communist editor.

The debate at Unesco headquarters centered on U.S. charges that the Russian-language version of Courier, the Unesco magazine, was censored in July to delete a report of how fish were poisoned in Russian rivers and by oil spills in the Caspian Sea.

Courier is a monthly Unesco publication printed in 13 languages. It reports on scientific and cultural affairs.

"Soviet censorship of the magazine, which is supposed to be identical in all translations, has amounted to outright lies in past publications," said Charles Lahiguera, spokesman for the U.S. Unesco delegation.

He showed examples of the English-language and Russian-language versions of the magazine dating back to 1959, which, he said, showed that the Soviet version suppressed materials reflecting unfavorably on the Soviet Union.

He said the Russians had deleted a large section from the July article on "Environmental Control and Economic Systems" that dealt with pollution in Russia.

Coastguardsmen Fined for Backing Nuclear Protest

JUNEAU, Alaska, Oct. 15 (AP)—Eighteen Coastguardsmen have been given nonjudicial punishment and fined for expressing support of a Canadian group sailing to Amchitka Island to protest a planned nuclear explosion, the Coast Guard says.

Fines ranging from $15 to $100 were levied against 17 enlisted men and an officer charged with violating the Uniform Code of Military Justice, a spokesman at 17th Coast Guard District headquarters said.

The men charged were aboard the cutter Confidence, which sent a party to board the Canadian protest ship Greenpeace at the Aleutian village of Adak.

The Coast Guard party was sent to inform the vessel's captain it had violated customs regulations.

While the commander of the Confidence, Floyd Hunter, spoke with the captain of the Greenpeace, coastguardsmen on the launch reportedly passed a message to the Greenpeace crew.

The officer involved was charged with conduct unbecoming to an officer. He received a letter of reprimand and three days' restriction.

Prospects for Senate passage of a similar bill, described as "landmark" legislation by proponents, are regarded as excellent. Hearings are expected to be held early next month by a government operations subcommittee headed by Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D., Conn.

The House-approved measure would empower the new Consumer Protection Agency to intervene on behalf of the consumer in formal proceedings ranging from the promulgation of auto safety standards to the enforcement of food and drug laws.

The amendment also would have authorized the agency to conduct reviews and investigations of the failure of regulatory agencies to initiate formal proceedings in cases handled informally. The regulatory agencies would have been required, under the amendment, to issue subpoenas for material requested by the consumer agency.

The amendment was rejected by a vote of 218 to 160. The White House has announced its support of the amended bill, reversing its earlier opposition to the creation of an independent agency.

PARIS, Oct. 15 (UPI)—The United States charged today that the Soviet Union was hiding the truth about Soviet industrial pollution from its people.

The charge, made at an executive council session of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (Unesco), was not directly answered by the Soviet delegation.

Instead, the Russians charged that a Unesco-financed magazine that printed an article on Soviet pollution was controlled by Americans, and proposed that its editorial board be altered to include a Communist editor.

The debate at Unesco headquarters centered on U.S. charges that the Russian-language version of Courier, the Unesco magazine, was censored in July to delete a report of how fish were poisoned in Russian rivers and by oil spills in the Caspian Sea.

Contradicting Report of Six Nixon Court List Now Said To Include at Least 15 Names

By Ken W. Clawson and John P. MacKenzie
WASHINGTON, Oct. 15 (WP)—At least 15 names are still under "active consideration" as potential nominees for the two Supreme Court vacancies, a high Nixon administration source reports.

Contradicting widespread reports that six names submitted to the American Bar Association represented finalists among the candidates, officials indicated that the search for two new justices is far from over.

While House press secretary Ron Ziegler said flatly that "more than six" prospects were being considered, another source raised the number to 15 and added that at least two of them were Jewish.

Deadline Approaching
This source advanced the possibility that if the investigation continued to expand, President Nixon might not be able to meet his self-imposed deadline of submitting two nominations to the Senate sometime next week.

Meanwhile, lawyers and law professors in various parts of the country said they had concluded, on the basis of inquiries by the ABA, that the administration already had cut its list to two or three names.

Rhine Pollution Worries Dutch

THE HAGUE, Oct. 15 (Reuters)—The Netherlands government today appealed urgently to Dutch industries to reduce as much as possible their discharge of waste into the polluted River Rhine and its tributaries.

The Transport Ministry said the quality of Rhine water is the worst it has ever been, presenting an increasing danger to fish and causing difficulties to waterworks supplying drinking water.

The Rhine is at its lowest level for years and is continuing to drop following a long spell without significant rain.

Names among the six sent Wednesday to the ABA's standing committee on the federal judiciary.

They said the most pointed inquiries concerned Herschel H. Friday Jr., 49, the Little Rock bond lawyer who has been a top contender to replace the late Justice Hugo L. Black, and Mildred L. Little 56, the Los Angeles appellate judge mentioned as a replacement for retired Justice John M. Harlan.

arm-War b to Shift to ncer Study

By Laurence Meyer
WASHINGTON, Oct. 15 (WP)—President Nixon will travel to Mexico, Md., Monday to announce the Army's Biological Research Center there be enlisted in the fight against cancer instead of being used for military purposes.

Decision to convert the biological laboratories to cancer research represented a victory for the White House against the Senate's opposition.

White House spokesmen said they would confirm only the President was planning to visit Mexico Monday.

Confidential memo written June to presidential aide D. Ehrlichman, Secretary of Defense, Education and Welfare L. Richardson outlined two programs for putting the sophisticated laboratories to use for cancer research.

Second proposal, which Mr. Ehrlichman recommended, would fund research only on cancer research that was not clear at the White House had one of these alternatives.

Transport Ministry said the quality of Rhine water is the worst it has ever been, presenting an increasing danger to fish and causing difficulties to waterworks supplying drinking water.

The Rhine is at its lowest level for years and is continuing to drop following a long spell without significant rain.

Presses Germany, Italy, Yugoslavia to Aid Drug War

BERLIN, Oct. 15 (AP)—A state Department official asked more help from West Germany, Italy and Yugoslavia to curb heroin from reaching the United States.

Mr. Gross, the department's "boss" on drugs, said that the morphine base from heroin is made in those countries on the secret laboratories in the Balkans.

He has been so active in the past two years, he said, that he has secured "greater commitment" from the French police.

Mr. Gross conferred with the European Community and the Atlantic Treaty Organization to set up a permanent school of U.S. officials could help train others in suppressing the narcotic traffic.

Talking to newsmen, he emphasized the need for more training and cooperation among police.

He also urged support for a U.S. proposal to put quotas on the export of drugs by producing countries limited to medical needs.

The proposal would give the United Nations narcotics control board the right to recommend a total embargo on drug imports from a country if it exceeded its quota.

The proposal, urged at an international meeting in Geneva earlier this month, ran into opposition from Mexico and Yugoslavia.

Mr. Gross also asked for contributions to an international fund which plans to spend $95 million on drug control. So far, a U.S. spokesman said, the United States has contributed $2 million, other countries $11,000.

Mr. Gross reported that West Germany has pledged a million marks (about $350,000).

Johnson Honors Eisenhower's Birthday, Lauds His Honesty

ABILENE, Kan., Oct. 15 (AP)—Former President Lyndon B. Johnson, recalling the immense popularity of the late Dwight D. Eisenhower, said yesterday he believes the late President's secret was in his honest approach to everything and the fact that "he was loyal, above all, to his country."

Mr. Johnson spoke of Gen. Eisenhower's "hold on the people" during a surprise eulogy delivered at rededication ceremonies for the expanded Eisenhower Museum.

Dockers Begin Return to Jobs On West Coast

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 15 (UPI)—Holdout longshoremen began returning to the docks of Los Angeles and Long Beach today for the first time since a federal judge ordered the West Coast dock strike ended nine days ago.

A spokesman for the Pacific Maritime Association, representing shipowners, said that if longshoremen continue to report for work, operations on the nation's second largest combined port complex should be back to normal over the weekend.

On the Gulf and East Coasts, some 30,000 members of the International Longshoremen's Association went into the 15th day of their strike against shipowners and 100,000 United Mine Workers remained idle in a strike against soft-coal operators in 20 states which also entered its 15th day.

ROME, Oct. 15 (WP)—A jewel thief has been reported to police in the small town of Tor de Greca, just south of Rome. The haul was estimated by the owner to be some 30 million lire, about $34,000.

The owner of the gems is a Vietnamese widow named Tran Le Huan, better known as Mrs. Nhu, sister-in-law of Vietnamese President Ngo Dinh Diem, who was deposed and killed in 1963.

Fortress America?

Meeting with a group of businessmen, Secretary of the Treasury Connally said that he was "struck by a basic lack of confidence—a basic spirit of gloom" that the United States was on the verge of going protectionist economically and becoming a "fortress America." He urged his audience to repress such gloomy thoughts and give the President their "unashamed and unabashed" support—to rise above partisanship, just as, said Mr. Connally, Mr. Nixon is doing.

The President's chief economic officer would do better to stop bulling forward in his effort to sell a highly aggressive, almost jingoistic, foreign economic policy and to pay greater attention to the underlying reasons why so many Americans, including many thoughtful business leaders, are so worried about that policy.

The United States may still possess enough sheer economic weight and power to force other governments to submit to its demands. The Japanese government, for instance, may be about to yield to the American requirement that it impose more severe quotas on its own textile industry, even if to do so produces immediate hardship and unemployment at home. Premier Sato must decide whether, in submitting to extreme American pressure in order to safeguard the return of Okinawa and to avoid even harsher economic sanctions, he can cope with what could prove to be an internal economic and political crisis.

But, whether he submits or not, it is reckless folly for the United States to impose such pressure on an important and highly sensitive ally—all for the sake of paying off Mr. Nixon's political debt to the textile industry in the South. American relations with Japan may be damaged for years to come both by the substance and by the manner of this form of economic diplomacy.

The same dangers exist in economic policies toward Europe. There, too, the United States may for a time possess the power to impose its demands on its allies, whose economic and political stability may be far less firm than they seemed only a short time ago. If the United States wants to break European confidence—whether for the sake of re-establishing dollar hegemony or to protect American industry and solve its domestic economic problems—it might get away with it in the short run.

But is it worth the doing? The so-called "Nixon Doctrine" in the international military area calls for a reduction of America's overcommitments and a more balanced sharing of responsibilities with allies. That policy must have its economic counterpart if it is to succeed.

The United States, Europe and Japan are three great economic and political entities which, standing and working together, can preserve the prosperity and security of the non-Communist world. If they are split into economically isolated and politically hostile blocs, the world may undergo the kind of disorder that had such tragic consequences during the 1930s.

THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Three Key Votes for Development

The political, economic and moral case for rich nations helping poor countries has always been strong, and the case has been made even more urgent by the adverse effect which the President's new economic policy necessarily has had on the currencies, export earnings, aid and investment receipts, and morale of the poor.

They have been the innocent and virtually helpless victims of the efforts of the rich to maintain and increase their own affluence. It thus becomes imperative that the United States act, promptly and effectively, to start to undo at least some of the damage.

The place to start, we are persuaded, lies in the legislation now pending in Congress to replenish the American share in the three principal banks which lend money on concessionary or easy terms to poor countries: the International Development Association and the Inter-American and Asian Development Banks.

A great deal has been said about retrenchment in our global policy—about "neoliberalism." There could be, in our judgment, no worse place to retrench, no area of policy in which the consequences of retrenchment could be more destructive of American interests, than in support of development. It is not simply a matter of earning favor or gratitude from the world's poor. We should all know by now that there are far easier and surer ways to win international favor. It is a matter of prudent investment in building the kind of world we can safely live in: a world in which the associations of rich and poor are friendly, honorable and mutually beneficial. This is the essential reason, we believe, why the Congress should replenish the three banks, quickly and fully.

International Opinion

Nixon's Achievement

Mr. Nixon fired off beauties with both barrels. Three months after having created the event of the year by announcing he would be the first U.S. President to visit Peking, he can now say he will also be the first to visit Moscow. The politician who entered public life denouncing the evils of Communism can think of the November, 1972, deadline with serenity: what candidate could submit to the voters so impressive a record as the one just made with the help of the Russians and Chinese? Mr. Nixon has truly carried off a spectacular reversal of the situation. Under his presidency, Washington has become the only capital of the three superpowers which seems capable of dialogues with the two others.

—From Le Monde (Paris).

Whatever the U.S. President's motives, his visit to the U.S.S.R. is of a nature to create a better international atmosphere. But this improvement will only last, and real detente prevail, if Mr. Nixon's move is matched with concrete measures likely to end the conflicts directly or indirectly provoked by the United States and to favor the organization of international security and disarmament. Mr. Nixon's policies are meeting grave difficulties in all fields. These difficulties are at the origin of his decisions to visit Peking and Moscow. But even though his planned visit to the U.S.S.R. cannot involve the same maneuvering aspects as his visit to China, it is hardly doubtful that Mr. Nixon is inclined to see it also as a sort of diversion. But world peace is something quite different. It requires a real revision of American policy aimed at peaceful coexistence.

—From L'Humanité (Paris).

The full significance of President Nixon's recent extraordinary and in some cases spectacular changes in the direction of American policy is now becoming apparent. He has turned a quarter of a century of American diplomacy on its head, by seeking a rapprochement with Communist China. He has destroyed the postwar system of settling international payments. And, in his most recent pronouncement, concerning "Phase 2" of the domestic aspect of his new economic policy, he has challenged orthodox conservative thinking everywhere by introducing into the U.S. a degree of economic interventionism not previously contemplated in peacetime since the days of the New Deal. It is not easy to imagine a Democratic President moving the economic management of the country as far to the left as the Republican Mr. Nixon has gone.

How Many Chinas?

The main argument advanced against retaining Formosa [Taiwan] is that China would refuse to come in [to the United Nations]. She has always said she would not join under a "two Chinas" solution. But there are already "three Russias"—the Ukraine and Byelorussia as well as the Soviet Union. If the American resolution, inviting Peking and retaining Formosa, succeeded, there would be a new situation. China would reconsider her position in the light of it. She might decide to adhere to her former position. If she did, there would be no occupant of the "China" seat in the Security Council at all, since the resolution would have removed Formosa from it. It seems inconceivable that Peking would not decide to occupy it, if not at once then soon; and if circumstances later led to a reconciliation between Taipei and Peking, China would then have two votes—closer to Russia's three than none. Let injustice not be done to the Formosan people out of pure expediency.

The Monetary War—I

By Anthony Lewis

LONDON—It is only two or three years since the British were using heroic measures to keep the value of the pound up. Now they are doing their best to hold it down. To ward off eager buyers of pounds, officials are talking gloomily about sterling's prospects and have even put up barriers against the phenomenon for which they used to yearn—foreign money entering Britain.

The turnaround is enough to confirm laymen in their suspicion that monetary affairs are beyond logic. But in fact the seeming anomaly in British policy throws some light on what is happening in the world money crisis. The implications, if explored, are a reminder of how dangerous a business it continues to be.

President Nixon took his emergency actions on the dollar Aug. 15. Since shortly afterward most other leading currencies have supposedly been floating—finding their own level in the market place instead of being exchanged at fixed rates. But it has not really been a free market.

Distortion Results

A series of national controls and interventions has made it a distorted float. The first and most significant was the 10 percent surcharge imposed by Mr. Nixon on imports. Exchange controls in Britain are another example.

What is happening is that everybody is trying to maneuver the market to his own advantage. Britain, West Germany, Japan—each is worried about its currency floating too high in relation to the others. The U.S. might prefer to fix rates there, they fear, putting them at a competitive disadvantage. That is why we have this curious spectacle of the British talking the pound down.

The distortion in the market—the dirty float, as it is being called—disturbs a number of exports. They have been arguing for years against rigid exchange rates, and now they want to see a real free market have a trial. They make a good technical case, but it may be that in their zeal they have lost sight of the larger framework of history.

Rigidity in the world monetary system was the problem of the 1960s, and events have gone a long way toward dissipating it. No country could hold an unrealistic exchange rate for as long now as Britain did between 1964 and 1967, because others would not lend the necessary money. Nor is any political leader likely to be as stubbornly impervious to the facts of financial life as Harold Wilson was then. Richard Nixon has made devaluation a much easier political act.

And so there will be much greater flexibility in the system even if the current floating period gives way again to agreed exchange rates. There will be more play in the joints, the margins, and countries will be readier to change values.

The danger of the 1970s is anarchy, not rigidity in the system. The great advantage that the world used to have, along with the occasional inconherence of fixed exchange rates, was an agreed set of rules for world trade and monetary relationships. Most countries stuck to the rules most of the time, and the result was the immense growth of world trade and prosperity in the post-war period.

Now the rules are being nibbled away, restriction is following, and the whole basis of the West's prosperity is in danger. The United States thumbed its nose at international order by imposing an illegal surcharge. It is in the process of enacting a tax advantage for domestic capital goods that is in even more flagrant violation of agreed rules. Other countries are imposing or threatening their own artificial barriers of one kind or another. In short, there is the danger of multiplying efforts at national monetary management. And that, in world terms, is lawlessness.

In such a situation the greatest need is order. A return to agreed exchange rates would be the most convenient symbol of order. Perhaps, if it is not too late, agreement on a new set of currency values would inspire a renewed willingness to abide by the rules of free world trade.

No Easy Task

But agreement is not going to be easy. The modest success of the recent International Monetary Fund meeting in Washington led to expressions of optimism that are seen here as quite unjustified. No instant solution to the monetary crisis is at hand. And the difficulties are many.

A number of countries, like Britain, have been in periods of domestic recession and are suffering high unemployment. They will hardly find it easy to accept revaluations putting them at a competitive disadvantage in the world.

The number of countries involved, the multilateral nature of the bargaining itself makes agreement difficult. It is hard for any one country even to draft a total solution. And the time is short. On this side of the Atlantic the feeling is that multiple retaliation may be inevitable if there is no solution by the end of the year.

Last, and in a way most profound, is the doubt about the attitude of the "Dollar States." Have we gone irrevocably into a protectionist phase? Are our leaders playing on that feeling for domestic reasons, or will they be ready to make fair international bargains? Those are the subjects of speculation here, and the prevailing mood is skeptical if not gloomy.

An Acheson Postscript

American Interests

By Dean Acheson

The former secretary of state wrote this article for The New York Times a few days before his death on Oct. 12.

WASHINGTON.—This piece begins, like the sermons of my youth, with a text. It is taken from testimony given last March and April before Senator Jackson's subcommittee on national security and international operations by two eminent authorities, the first on the Middle East by Bernard Lewis, the second by Robert Conquest on the Soviet Union:

"The overriding reality is the confrontation, all over the world, including the Middle East, of two great powers—of two systems and civilizations—perhaps about to become three. All else is subordinate and secondary."

"...The object of policy in this area should be to find the most effective means of opposing the adversary—not to collect autographs."

"...Closed ideology and lack of access to other thoughts, which have prevailed in the Soviet Union since its formation, automatically led to progressive degeneration of the political mind, so that the present Soviet leadership [is] composed of a group of rather bigoted fundamentalists with a disturbingly low level of intelligence—in general a third-rate group... and since their judgment is not of the highest order, I would expect them to create situations of the utmost danger to the world peace."

The Russian leaders are so unique in their mediocrity. So universally is that shared that our age might be called the apothecary of mediocrity. What makes them so great a danger to world peace is that third-rate judgment is activated by highly aggressive purpose and armed by a military establishment second to none.

The Middle East is a point of danger because there we confront the energetic and purposeful action of an adversary who will be dissuaded only by encountering unacceptable risks, as in Cuba in 1962.

The Arab-Israeli conflict is important to those parties, but it is subordinate and secondary. It becomes a major problem only because of the possibility of direct military involvement of the two great powers.

If outside involvement were to be limited to supplying the primary combatants with more and more sophisticated weapons, the injuries they might inflict upon each other might be greater than in the past, but total victory would not be possible.

Divergent Goals

While further hostilities would be entirely possible, the probable result would be, for both sides, an excess of losses over gains. Such a situation would contain the seeds of stability, and an approach to a modus vivendi.

The Soviet Union is currently pursuing two goals in the Middle East—not wholly compatible. One is to continue Arab dependence by maintaining a state of tension approaching, but not reaching, outright war.

The other is reopening the Suez Canal. This would give Moscow naval dominance in the Persian Gulf and Indian Ocean and power to control the movement of Persian Gulf oil to Europe, East Asia and North America.

These aims may be incompatible, since a reopened canal would require peace, whereas maintaining a high state of tension would endanger it.

Mini-States and the U

By Stephen Schwabel

WASHINGTON—Fifty years ago, the Assembly of the League of Nations demonstrated a lot more sense than did the General Assembly of the United Nations earlier this month. The issue then, as now, was the status of mini-states.

Liechtenstein was denied admission to the League by a vote which followed "upon" a report made to this Assembly. That report noted that Liechtenstein has been recognized de jure by many states. She has concluded a number of treaties. The principality of Liechtenstein possesses a stable government and fixed frontiers. There can be no doubt that juridically the Principality of Liechtenstein is a sovereign state, but by reason of her limited area, small population, and her geographical position, she has chosen to depute to others some of the attributes of sovereignty. Liechtenstein has no army. For the above reasons, we are of the opinion that the Principality of Liechtenstein could not discharge all the international obligations which would be imposed on her by the Covenant."

The General Assembly of the United Nations has just voted to admit Qatar to membership (along with Bahrain and Brunei). The unanimous recommendation of the Security Council on which this action was based shows no signs of the judiciousness which characterized the League's proceedings of 1920. By 1920, Liechtenstein had been more or less independent for 300 years; by 1971, Qatar had been independent for some weeks. The population of Liechtenstein (not a UN member) is about 31,000; that of Qatar, about 80,000. Qatar's approximately 4,000 square miles—only an approximation, since its frontiers, unlike Liechtenstein's, not only are not stable but not even fully delimited—are much more than Liechtenstein's 62 square miles. They are also far less industrialized and richly agricultural; its Gross National Product compares favorably with Qatar's (which is based virtually alone on oil); it has no military and Qatar has much. It has had long if limited experience in international relations; Qatar virtually none.

Why the difference in result? Why are the established European mini-states largely out and the new Asian and African mini-states in?

Not one of the mini-states currently in vogue are any more able to carry out the obligations of the Charter of the United Nations than the older mini-states were able to carry out those of the League Covenant. On the contrary, the obligations imposed upon UN members are much greater than those imposed on members of the League.

Membership in the United Nations, Article 4 of the Charter provides, is open to "peace-loving states which accept the obligations contained in the present Charter and, in the judgment of the organization, are able and willing to carry out these obligations."

What sort of judgment is it that moves the organization to conclude that Qatar or Bahrain (population 195,000, area 231 square miles) are able and willing to carry out the obligations of the Charter—to "fulfill in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter," such as the obligation to give the United Nations "every assistance in any action it takes in accordance with the present Charter." Or that the Maldives Islands, admitted to membership in 1965—population circa 100,000, capacities to do most anything international virtually zero—can fulfill Charter obligations?

When the representative of the United States in the Security Council unreservedly supported the admission of Qatar and Bahrain, he stated: "Today many of the small emerging entities, however willing, probably do not have the human or economic resources at this stage to meet this second criterion [the ability to carry out Charter obligations]. We would therefore urge that Council members and other United Nations members give early and careful consideration to this problem in an effort to arrive at some agreed standards, some lower limits, to be applied in the case of future applicants for United Nations membership."

Secretary-General U Thant expanded upon this theme in 1967. "I would suggest," he submitted in his annual report, "that it may be opportune for the competent organs to undertake a thorough and comprehensive study of the criteria for membership in the United Nations, with a view to laying down the necessary limitations on full membership while also defining other forms of association which would be both the "microstates" and United Nations.

As far as can be planned, the influx of mini-states has increased the perception that the "small colonies" now out of former colonies now in the offing of emerging major powers denied UN membership. It is likely that the British right. The fashion is dejection at all costs (especially they are paid by the host states); and how independent a new nation be without status symbol of a UN vote.

To be sure, a very few states have exercised a veto which has escaped the United Nations. Western Europe became independent in the refrained from applying for membership, despite a population area exceeding that of 44 members (197,000; 1,097 miles), and independent with a population of some and an area of about eight miles, also has not applied for membership through its plates give it perhaps the 3 per-capita income in the world.

What is to be done about rest—if not those already score or more of "bits and pieces" of dissolving empires this come in if the present a of standards is maintained.

First, such territories are encouraged not to opt dependence where they la resources and the situation uly to maintain it.

Second, independence not be equated with UN membership. Samoa has set a which others should apply United Nations can render nical assistance, the World can invest, the UN agencies can give their services to small territories are not UN members mini-states could have a server or even an associate voting status at the United Nations—without Charter ment, and without the t of membership.

Seventy-Five Years Ago

October 16, 1896

PARIS—It is not surprising, perhaps, that some of the Radical London papers, which would like to see the attempt made, take seriously the sensational rumor that a little United States cruiser had been ordered to pass the Dardanelles. But the mere attempt should not be made. It is a fact that the United States has enough to attend to at home, without meddling in foreign affairs which do not concern it in the least.

Fifty Years Ago

October 16, 1921

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Senator Lodge has just introduced in the Senate a bill which has been agreed to by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, forbidding the export of munitions to revolutionaries in any country wherein the United States has extra-territorial rights. It is understood that the bill is intended to follow the policy of the principal Powers in prohibiting arms and munitions from going to China. Will it be effective or not?

European Galleries Elegance, Clarity, Light in London

John Safer, Main Entrance—American Embassy, Grosvenor Square, London W1, to Oct. 22. Sculptor John Safer is holding his first show in London under the sponsorship of Ambassador and Mrs. Waller H. Annenberg. Certainly he could have no better showcase for his acrylic, plexiglas and plastic work—some of it is quite large. Therefore it requires big spaces to be viewed at its best advantage. "I create because I am alive," Safer has written. "I sculpt because space perception is the sensory input to which I respond most deeply. I work in plastics because of the qualities of the materials, the cleanness, the flow, the purity and the response to light." Elegance, clarity, light, and an excellent sense of objects in space—that sums it up.

Danosa Oppenheim, Upper Grosvenor Galleries, 19 Upper Grosvenor St., London W1, to Oct. 23.

Sir Duncan Oppenheim is a lawyer and businessman, who happens also to be a painter. As Prof. Carel Weight says in his catalogue introduction: "When a man who has spent a great portion of his life doing other things suddenly produces pictures of such real originality and beauty, he is deserving of the highest praise and respect." Indeed he is. In his first one-man show, "Metaflora," each large painting is the essence—or distillation—of a particular flower. Botanically they are impeccable, in spirit, Oriental, as they are, to some degree, in execution.

Robert Malone, Madden Galleries, 71 Duke St., Grosvenor Square, London W1, to Oct. 27.

Malone, an American who lives and works in Italy, has understood classical painting extremely well. Here are Italian landscapes which would have been acceptable to Corot; still-lives reminiscent of Courbet; portraits which could be by David or one of his pupils. Of course it can be argued that to paint this way today is sidestepping life, but if one wishes to express and share pleasure in landscapes, people or food, why not do so in an aesthetic language everyone understands?

Edna Clarke Hall, D'Offay Couper Gallery, 9 Dering St., New Bond St., London W1, to Oct. 29.

Edna Clarke Hall, 92 years old, began her studies in 1894 at the Slade School of Art, where she was a contemporary of Augustus John. This show of drawings and watercolors ranges from 1895 to 1947.

The self-portraits show a beautiful, intelligent and very determined young woman, who knew and portrayed other to-be-famous artists, including Owen John, Ambrose McEvoy, William Rothenstein and William Orpen. Her drawings have great purity of line. It is a pleasure to see once again the great beginnings of 20th-century English art.

John Carter, Redfern Gallery, 20 Cork St., London W1, to Oct. 30.

Carter works in the area between painting and sculpture. His works here are large-scale, abstract, complex of material and simple in thought. Although clearly, cleanly painted and constructed, they seem to say little to the beholder. This might be the fault of the viewer, but the relative lack of imagination and concept in the studies left me with doubts.

MAX WYKES-JOYCE

BARCELONA

Mrs. Sala Gaspar, 323 Consejo de Gensó, Barcelona, through October.

This series of 15 lithographs by Miro are in memory of his friend, Joan Prats, the Barcelona hatmaker. The lithographs are in color, but there is a second version in black and white. A predominance of black which heightens the blue, red, green and yellow of the color series, but makes the black and white graphics mournful without the usual Miro flick of gaiety.

Miguel Vila, Serra de Rivera, Sergi Aguilar, Galeria Adria, 258 Consejo de Gensó, Barcelona, to Oct. 23.

This selection of paintings, drawings, graphics, sculpture and jewelry by three young Barcelona artists includes some very fine graphic work, especially by Miguel Vila, which is surrealistic in feeling. The paintings come lamely behind. Sergi Aguilar's jewelry is really miniature sculpture, professional and smooth. Serra de Rivera has an obsession with green giant leaves against a throbbing pink sky in his paintings; his graphic work is much better.

Mompou, Sala Parés, 5-8 Petritxol, Barcelona, to Oct. 30.

A sample of Mompou's work through 1936 is on view in the two Parés galleries. Landscapes, seascapes, nudes, portraits, still-lives. Mompou was a painter of great charm and deceiving simplicity in his landscapes and seascapes. Of surprising fresh color. The nudes are less interesting; the hands are unfinished. There is only one drawing on view, which is a pity.

Niebla, Galeria de Arte Aquitania, 31-33 Avenue Sarría, Barcelona, to Oct. 20.

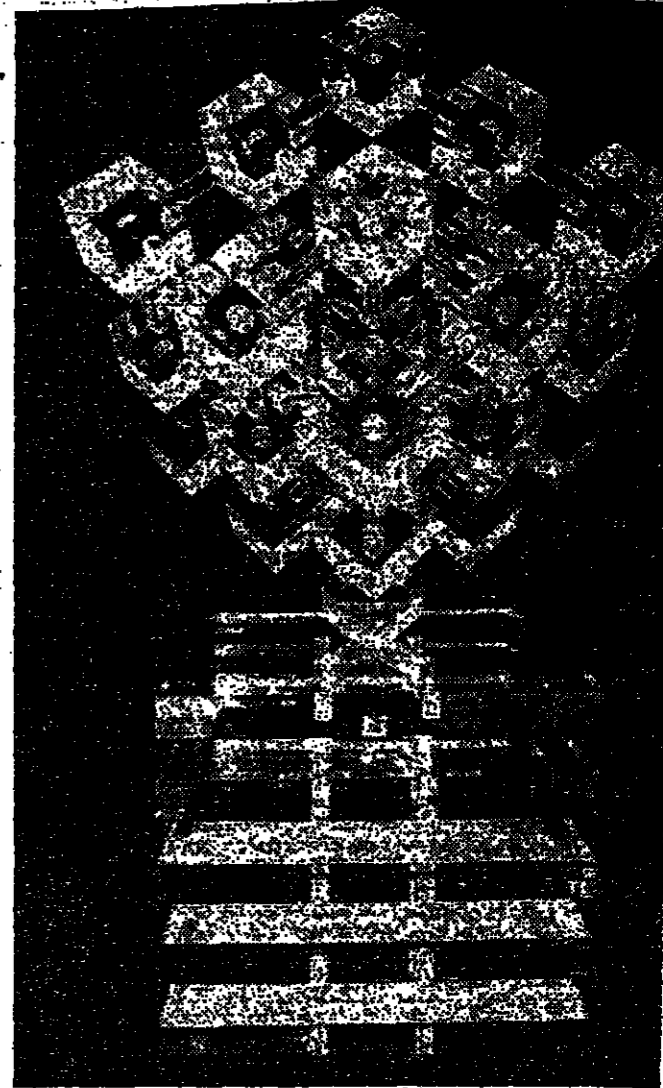

Niebla of Morocco is cloudy, influenced by Fautrier. The pictures smile with their bland colors. He plays with glass and mirror.

SHEILA ANNE DE BARRY

PARIS

Gaïtis, Arts/Contacts, 31 Rue du Collège, Paris 8, to Nov. 13.

Greek artist Yannis Gaïtis's paintings and wooden cut-outs deal with the theme of anonymity in a way that is sometimes amusing in spite of repetitions. His cut-out characters with their characteristic nonfaces occasionally manifest individualistic impulses (e.g. "Le Mauvais Coucheur") without achieving individuality for all that. A simple alphabet of conformity and freedom that makes its point.

Stämpfli, Galerie Rive Droite, 3 Rue de Duras, Paris 8, to Oct. 30.

Swiss painter Peter Stämpfli has a subject of which he never wearies: tires. This exhibition is devoted to drawings that dwell upon the labyrinthine geometries cut into their surfaces.

Söhl, Galerie Les Gramblers, 14 Rue Domat, Paris 5, to Oct. 25.

Manfred Söhl is a naïf from Germany who fits into this category because he somehow succeeds in evoking the play fantasies of childhood without being cut. His draftsmanship is also naïf to be sure, with well-profiled shapes, straightforward colors and all writing clearly legible (names of boats, etc.).

Pons, Le Point Cardinal, 3 Rue Jacob, Paris 6, to Nov. 27.

Louis Pons's exhibition of assemblages two years ago revealed a morbid vision with a sinister sense of humor. This vision is still morbid but, as the artist had suddenly become that he was being watched still dwells on impotent death but his irony has grown independent. The assemblage made from an infinite number of odds and ends, clothed in actions, rags, dead and de animals, etc.

Germain, Saint Gilles, 48 Grenelle, Paris 7, to Nov. 7. Jean-Louis Germain's canvases show a rather taste for large surfaces or calligraphic. Big, so blurred squares with the work's apparent are asymmetrical framed by rectangles of hues. The result has no intensity but a good rather elegant sensibility.

MARKET

Specializing in 19th Century

By Souren Melikian

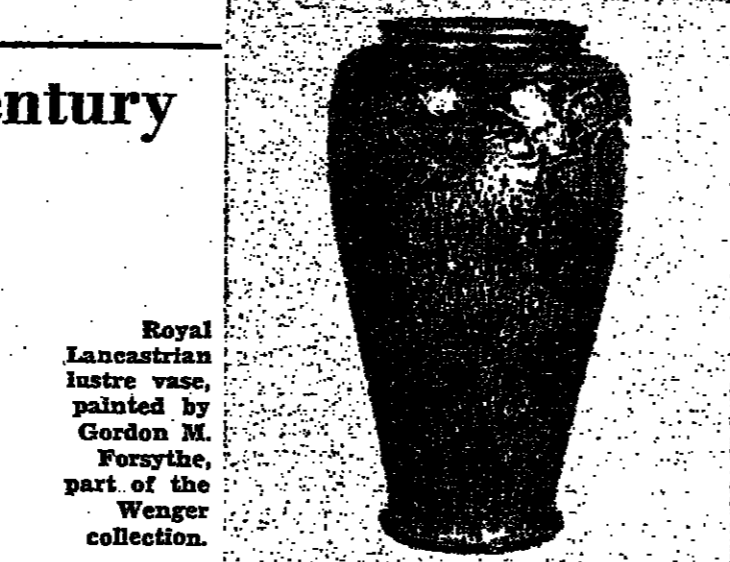

At 15 (NET)—Next Tuesday, Sotheby's will open a branch to deal with 19th-century art, focusing attention on the most significant trend developing in the 1970s...

to be sold at Sotheby's, Belgrave, 19 Motcomb St., London, an auction of Victorian paintings. Two days later, the 19th-century and 20th-century ceramics, formed into a block...

is a striking variety of works of art to be sold in the Victorian silver, conventional in spite of its attempt at the little in common with the daring experiments made by glass maker Emile Gallé at the turn of the century...

means that Sotheby's is thinking, not in terms of the 19th century, but in terms of the 1970s. Since a profit-minded organization is suspected of indulging in art history for the first time, it follows that the period itself has become the "19th century" was the catchword of the sixties...

ver, in my view, the criteria for "good" and "bad" 19th-century works are essentially different from those applied to 18th-century objects. The 19th century was an experimental age, and category it is the novelty of experimentation which should be judged...

Royal Lancasterian lustre vase, painted by Gordon M. Forsythe, part of the Wenger collection.

ator Joseph Evans. In the work, two naked children are seemingly holding up a large bowl. It is 37 inches high and 40 inches wide—about the right size for the entrance hall of a glazed red-brick mansion in the English countryside...

To the contrary, the "studio pottery" is remarkable. There are some wares from the Ruskin Pottery, founded by W. Lawson Taylor (1876-1885) near Birmingham in 1893, which foreshadow the best modern pottery made after 1914...

Just as interesting are the large earthenware plaques composed as pictures in a style echoing the work of the painters of the 1920s. A Minton plaque, with impressed marks including code for 1902 by Leon Solon (1877-1897), shows a singer in an emerald-green evening gown against turquoise draperies with another woman at her feet merely outlined.

This sale, with its 168 lots, will allow buyers to confront conventionalism with the more imaginative pieces and probably establish a price scale. In this respect, it will be one of the most important sales of the season.

COLOGNE

An Air of Uncertainty at the Fair

By Barbara Beuys

COLOGNE, Oct. 15 (NET).—There was a surprising air of uncertainty, even the atmosphere of a funeral, at the Cologne Art Fair, now in its fifth year.

The facts, however, made such pessimism unrealistic. The fair, which has become the greatest clearing house for modern art, was again a super show. And, again it was split into establishment and anti-establishment camps. The establishment was housed in the Kunsthalle; it included 18 German galleries and 17 from abroad...

tion Fair promised better buys and a greater cross-section, but in the end the difference was only on the surface; it was a bit more colorful and lively.

A few yards away, there were self-appointed martyrs, who defy rules and "economic pressures" in art and society and lack more and more quality. They settled down in a large tent with their kitsch. Every man his own artist is a slogan that has proven itself wrong.

At the official galleries, there was nothing new or exciting. More and more of them are concentrating on one artist instead of giving a confusing mixture, and that makes life easier. There was Leo Castelli with three huge Lichtensteins ($45,000 each, all sold), and Hans Schnabel with Hauschangers, not very convincing cardboard reliefs ($6,500 to $16,000)...

LONDON THEATER

Trio of Superb Performances by John Wood

By John Walker

LONDON, Oct. 15 (NET).—One of the imperishable joys of last season was Harold Pinter's meticulously passionate direction of James Joyce's only play, "Exiles." It was memorable not only for the way this little-regarded work flowered under Mr. Pinter's delicate touch but also for the dramatic brilliance of John Wood as Richard Rowan...

"Exiles," glory be, has now found a new home with the Royal Shakespeare Company at the Aldwych. The production climaxes a trio of superb performances that Mr. Wood is currently giving at the theater—the others are as the drunken Yakov in Gorky's "Enemies," and as the sublimely foolish Sir Popling Plutier in "The Man of Mode." But it is as Rowan that he is at his extraordinary best, able to express to perfection a nervous, quick intelligence, a teeming mind almost at its breaking point.

Joyce put much of himself into his portrait of Rowan, a writer returning to Ireland after nine years of self-imposed exile. He had fled with Bertha (Vivien Merchant), a woman unable to give him intellectual stimulus. He returns with her and their child to a country he still rejects, to Beatrice (Estelle Kohler), the girl who had inspired his work, and to his oldest friend and disciple, Robert (T.P. McKenna). Encumbered by the direct and simple love of Bertha, Rowan tries to force on her a freedom she does not want by encouraging her to have an affair with Robert. In the complex sexual maneuvers that follow, Joyce reveals attitudes that suggest D.H. Lawrence: Rowan discovers a dark and secret thrill at the thought of betrayal, and the two men form a strange homosexual bond through loving the same woman.

'It is as Rowan (in "Exiles") that he is at his extraordinary best, able to express to perfection a nervous, quick intelligence, a teeming mind almost at breaking point.'

Taking full advantage of Joyce's evasive dialogue, Mr. Pinter coaxes the play into moving life. Miss Merchant, suppressing her own intelligence, makes a serene Bertha. At the moment, the production lacks a little of its former crispness, and Mr. McKenna is altogether too bland and lightweight as Robert, without the coarse vitality that Timothy West brought to the part. But, for all that, the production remains a source of great delight.

original work, a brooding and melancholy play of failure, of false starts in life that cause recurrent tragedy. The setting is a village on the edge of a highway.

The highway is seen in primitive, anachronistic terms as a monster that has spread concrete over life-giving land and now demands appeasement in the form of human sacrifice. The play is full of the noise of traffic, permeated by the feeling of endless journeys that lead nowhere.

Mr. Terson is rather perfunctory with his plot, involving a triangle of young lovers and a wedding that will end the rivalry between two families. Instead, he concentrates on the flawed Bert Clareles, the father of the bride, a farmer who now runs a garage and longs to return to the land. He is a tragic and complex figure, continually falling those people to whom he offers friendship. A remarkable creation, the part is excellently acted by Joseph O'Connor, especially in his final bravura account of how, during the war, he stood by and did nothing while villagers lacked a black GI to death with their hoses. Garth Morgan directs.

It has been London's loss, for few British writers can match the crackling energy and power of his prose. He, too, has not succumbed to the middle-aged, middle-class nostalgia that seems to be infecting a whole generation of British playwrights. His "Skin Road Wedding," at the Shaw Theatre, takes its plot from Lorca's "Blood Wedding" but is otherwise an intensely

Le Théâtre du Soleil's production of "1789" at the Round House has conquered London, as it did Paris, with its mob's-eye-view of the French Revolution.

England's nearest equivalent is Spenser's Corner and, as at Hyde Park, the Round House audience is forced into participation by having to stand in the center of an arena while the action takes place around them. Moving from one stage to another, being alternately entertained or harangued, the audience is so caught up in events that the central point of the production—the carnival that follows the fall of the Bastille—becomes a genuine explosion of joy and celebration, a fairground full of jugglers, wrestlers, acrobats and sideshows. I felt genuinely deprived when La Fayette stops the merriment with the words "The revolution is over!" It is the company's extraordinary ability to discover emotional equivalents for historical events that makes "1789"

U.S. Industry to Ask Price Hikes

By Michael C. Jansen
NEW YORK, Oct. 15 (NYT)—A number of industries, trapped between higher labor costs and frozen price levels...

Discussions with business executives, analysts and economists indicate that nearly every industry in the country will have a problem to take before the commission...

Many companies say they will face a serious profit squeeze if pay increases are allowed without offsetting price increases.

In fact, some corporate executives in recent weeks have called for increased prices to ease this already existing squeeze.

Most economists agree that two outside factors will have a strong bearing on whether price increases are applied for and granted.

First is the critical matter of whether wage increases already negotiated will be allowed, either fully or partially.

Some industries, steel, for example, are operating far below capacity and the market place might not support a price increase at the moment...

Among the industries that have recently granted pay increases and will be looking to the price commission for price relief...

The Dow Jones Industrial Average, firming a bit before the closing bell, declined 3.51 to 874.85.

Even more pointedly, the market is now wandering within a kind of no-man's-land on the charts.

On the previous Friday, the indicator had finished at 856.02. Many chartists believe this gap must be closed—or tested...

The overall impression, bankers said, was that the Fed was showing its determination not to allow an overly expansive monetary policy to spoil the administration's chances of achieving success with its broad program to stabilize prices and wages in this country.

Some signs of steadiness appeared in the market after yesterday's broad-front retreat.

BOOKS

KENNEDY JUSTICE By Victor S. Navasky. Atheneum. 482 pp. Reviewed by Thomas Lask.

"KENNEDY Justice" is a sophisticated, refined and, to a nonlegal mind, exhaustive study of Robert F. Kennedy as attorney general of the United States. But it is also much more. It's a concentrated course in the way the Department of Justice is organized and functions; a classic example of the clash between an inventive, open, concerned and a settled, stolid, monolithic bureaucracy; a case history of the opposition of idealism and expediency. It will define the word law in ways most laymen have not thought of. It tells how things get done and do not get done in government. It recreates on a believable plane the mystique and attraction of Robert Kennedy. Reading this book may not make you a better man, but it will surely make you a wiser one. Central to Navasky's account and one that will save it from hundreds of similar analyses is the vibrant and dynamic personality of Robert Kennedy—not as an outstanding legal thinker, but as a human being: eager, driving, urgent. He was wedded to action, not ideology. His battle cry: "What are you doing about it?" As everyone knows, the opposition to his appointment was loud and articulate. He had been a middling student, had never tried a case in court, had not practiced. His experience had come as counsel to the McCarthy and McClellan Senate committees on subversion and crime, which to many of his critics were arguments against his appointment to the office with a committed legal philosophy. As someone remarked, he went from problem to problem, not from doctrine to doctrine. But the qualities that later proved his success were less remarked on: his executive and organizational ability, a way of picking good men, a superb eye for spotting options and using them and a mind that expanded with his responsibilities. In fact, the impression the author leaves is that of a man with purpose and vision hampered, blocked, impeded by political considerations, bureaucratic red tape, procedural precedents. There were enough failures during Kennedy's term, some of them profound, and Navasky ticks them off, but these failures had less to do with cases won or lost than with the flaws and strengths of the central figure in a great drama. Parts of "Kennedy Justice" will raise tempers, for it revives the argument between J. Edgar Hoover and Mr. Kennedy as to whether the Federal Bureau of Investigation indulged in bugging without specifically letting the attorney general know. Navasky believes general knowledge of the bugging of deLorch, the FBI was guilty of deception," he says. At one point, he states that the FBI asked for permission to lease a telephone wire, permission the bureau never intended to use, simply to implicate Kennedy in what were essentially extralegal activities. The relationship of Kennedy to the FBI was an intricate one, and Navasky has traced it in all its Machiavellian detail. Although technically part of the Justice Department, and therefore under the orders of the attorney general, the bureau was run by Hoover as an independent. It was secret, tight and in dozens of ways it any activity of the department it did not report. It gave what it wished, revealed sources it felt proper (they were only credit-ations and newspaper and provided only the it felt like. All this was not just of bureaucratic nicety results were considered Kennedy got to be at al, the FBI, says: was little interested in with his prodding, if it. # Briles Upstaged by Tears During 5th-Game Victory

by Murray Chass
PITTSBURGH, Oct. 15 (UPI).—Nelson Briles cried yesterday, but not because he had pitched a no-hitter. He was crying because he had pitched a no-hitter.

Briles, 32, pitched a no-hitter for the Pittsburgh Pirates against the Oakland Athletics in the fifth game of the National League World Series.

Palmer Leads by 2 In France With 66

By Bernard Kirsch
SAINT-NOM-LA-BRETECHE, France, Oct. 15 (UPI).—Lu Liang-huan played good golf, Arnold Palmer played even better, which is what always happens when the two get together for a round.

The golfers were paired here today in a Paris suburb in the Lancome Trophy tournament—an invitation event being held for the second time to try to promote golf in France. Palmer and Lu gave a gallery of about 2,000 a fine example of how the game should be played.

Palmer, who has found his magic charge again, finished the 6,947-yard course with a string of three birdies for a six-under-par 66. He had a total of five birdies on the back nine for a 31 and, on the final hole, hit a wedge for his second shot which landed 10 inches from the cup. The gallery, in various accents, yelled "Attaboy Arnold." It was what they had hoped to see, what they had heard the sport's king does all the time back home on the U.S. tour.

Lu, of Taiwan, who said he has now been paired with Palmer about four times, had a 68 to trail by two strokes in this 54-hole tournament worth $28,000 with a $20,000 first prize. He scored the back nine with a 32—with birdies on the 15th, 16th and 17th holes, to be in a three-way tie for second place with Tony Jacklin of Britain and South African Gary Player.

It was a day for under-par golf as Roberto de Vicenzo of Argentina and Chi Chi Rodriguez of Puerto Rico had 71s. Frenchman Jean Garalde carded a par 73 and the only man to fall was Spaniard Ramon Sota, with a 76.

Of Palmer, Lu said, "He always play good when he play with me. When we play in Japan, he play with me. When we play in Japan, he play 65, I play 67. In Hong Kong, he play 67, I play 68. I think he like to play with me."

Tomorrow afternoon, Palmer is matched with De Vicenzo and the "Mysterious Mr. Lu," as he is known, is paired with Garalde. But "Mr. Lu" is not really mysterious, unless you're not a golfer fan. Lu, 36, has been on the Asian and European golf circuits for 15 years. He has been on Taiwan's World Cup team and in 1968, was tied for the individual lead in that event after 36 holes. This year he became "Mr. Lu's revelation" after he finished second in the British Open in the British Open. He came to France soon after and won the French Open in Biarritz.

For Palmer, this is the second straight year he has appeared here. Last year, in the tournament's inception, he finished in a tie for second with Sota, both one stroke behind Jacklin.

Sharp Putting
Palmer's putting, which was a main factor in his decline until this year, when he won four tournaments, was sharp. He made a 13-footer on the fourth, a 20-footer on the 14th and made birdie puts of six and eight feet on the 16 and 17th holes.

On the 18th, after Palmer's second shot landed 10 inches from the cup, Lu said, "I'll give you that one." Palmer smiled and tapped in the putt.

Until the charges of Palmer and Lu, the hot duo on the course was Jacklin and De Vicenzo, who started out by making a mockery of the course.

Jacklin birdied four of the first six holes and came in at 32, while De Vicenzo had three birdies on the first five holes and came in with 33 for the front nine. But when the earlier starting duo slowed up, "Mr. Palmer" and "Mr. Lu" went charging by. Unmysteriously.

Slipping Orioles Name Palmer to Face Moose

From Wire Dispatches
PITTSBURGH, Oct. 15.—There isn't much a baseball team can say after it has been held to two hits, and that's exactly what the Baltimore Orioles had to say yesterday: not much.

"I can't tell if it's their pitching or our hitting," said manager Earl Weaver, "but we certainly haven't been playing the kind of ball we're capable of. I've been sitting there watching Pittsburgh play the kind of ball we've played all year.

"I'll tell you how it is," said Frank Robinson, the acknowledged leader of the Orioles. "On Saturday (in the sixth game, at Baltimore) we'll see what kind of a ball club we really are. That's when we're going to separate the men from the boys. We have had no offense the last three games and we haven't been thinking. They (the Pirates) haven't run us out of the park but we're going to have to beat them in the big test."

It will be up to Jim Palmer, who won the last game the Orioles won, 11-2, in Baltimore on Monday, to prolong the World Series tomorrow. For the seventh game, if there is one, on Sunday, Weaver said he was "90 percent sure" he would use Mike Cuellar.

Pittsburgh manager Danny Murthaugh said he would use Bob Moose tomorrow and come back with Steve Blass Sunday, if necessary.

Palmer, who celebrated his 28th birthday today, has been a 20-game winner for two years in a row and has a 3-1 career win-loss record in the World Series. He will be attempting to prevent the Pirates from doing what has not been accomplished before—winning the Series in four straight after losing the first two games. Moose was 11-7 this season.

In the Orioles dressing room today, clubhouse attendant Clay Reid chalked a poetic reminder of a past disaster on a blackboard and underscored the challenge the Orioles face. The ditty, citing the Series loss to the Mets in 1969 and the year it took to come back, read:

"Remember the Mets—
It took a year
Now we can do it
In two days here."

Colts' Curtis Set to Cast Aside Giants

By William N. Wallace
NEW YORK, Oct. 15 (UPI).—Mike Curtis, the Baltimore Colts' middle linebacker, has a plaster cast on his right forearm to the elbow, protecting a broken bone in the thumb.

Curtis, who with his teammates will take on the Giants at New York on Sunday, is aggressive enough as a natural without plastering a forearm.

"No need to worry," said Curtis on the telephone from his home in Columbia, Md. "The league has rules. You have to put three-eighths of an inch of sponge rubber foam over the cast. It's so thick I don't think I could hurt a fly."

Curtis broke the bone—it has two metal pins in it—Oct. 3. Last week in Buffalo, with the lower arm immobilized, he intercepted two passes—thrown right at him.

Curtis passed inspection. Before the game the referee checked the cast and the insulation and gave Curtis a warning.

"He told me if I used the arm as a weapon he would penalize me 15 yards and throw me out," said Curtis. "It was the last thing on my mind. I wanted to avoid hitting anybody. It hurts when hit."

Here is a preview of all National Football League games, with win-loss-lead records in parentheses:

BALTIMORE (2-10) at N.Y. GIANTS (2-9).—Because the Colts have given up only 17 points, none in the last six periods, Fran Tarkenton will need a masterpiece.

NBA Bucks Rip Suns in Opener

NEW YORK, Oct. 15 (UPI).—The Milwaukee Bucks opened their defense of the National Basketball Association title with a 110-97, come-from-behind road victory over the Phoenix Suns in the season opener for both teams last night.

Kareem Jabbar, also known as Lew Alcindor, led the Bucks with 31 points and 19 rebounds. Oscar Robertson had 17 points and was credited with 17 assists.

Racing Official Trotter Fired by N.Y. Group

NEW YORK, Oct. 15 (UPI).—Trotsky Trotter, racing secretary and handicapper for the New York Racing Association, affirmed yesterday that he had been dismissed from his position by Alfred Gaymans Vandenberg, chairman of the board of trustees of the organization. The dismissal is effective Dec. 15, the end of the New York thoroughbred racing season.

Pressed for a comment in the matter, Vandenberg said, "The New York Racing Association is grateful for the decade of loyal services on the part of Trotter. His departure was the result of difference of opinion upon matters of policy."

Rondon Beats Velensek

BERLIN, Oct. 15 (Reuters).—Vincente Rondon, Venezuela's light-heavyweight World Boxing Association champion, outboxed European title-holder Conny Velensek of West Germany to score a unanimous decision over ten rounds here last night in a non-title bout.

WHOA NELLIE—Nelson Briles of the Pirates, winner of the fifth game of the World Series, falls after pitching in ninth inning to Orioles Mark Belanger. Briles, who ends up in the position several times a game, won, 4-0.

Fischer, Petrosian Stay Tied Draw in Chess On 38th Move

BUENOS AIRES, Oct. 15 (UPI).—U.S. chess ace Bobby Fischer and former world chess champion Tigran Petrosian of the Soviet Union drew after 38 moves of the fifth game of their match in the Teatro San Martin in Buenos Aires. It was the third drawn game in succession and left the score tied, with 2 1/2 points for each player.

Petrosian varied by using the Petroff defense after Fischer's almost inevitable 1 P-K4. The opening is rarely seen in modern grandmaster practice, though well suited to Petrosian's defensive style.

Fischer played more forcefully in the opening, building up a strong center, with more mobility for his pieces. Instead of directly challenging the center, Petrosian advanced his queen side pawns, with the objective of opening lines for his men in that area.

Fawn Offered
Tactical complications started with Fischer's 18th move. He offered a pawn, which Petrosian could have gained by 18...P-Q4. Fischer would have obtained compensation by advancing his queen and rook on the queen side.

Petrosian avoided this possibility, playing to equalize in the center. By doing so he allowed Fischer to establish a passed pawn.

On his 24th move, Fischer should have exchanged pawns rather than advancing his knight pawn. The pawn appeared strong, but Petrosian quickly surrounded it. Fischer had to let it go, taking another pawn as compensation.

In the process, queens and a pair of rooks were exchanged and the game was equalized. Petrosian offered a draw on his 34th move. Fischer refused, but four moves later, seeing no winning prospects, he offered a draw in turn, which Petrosian immediately accepted.

The sixth game will be played Sunday. Games are scheduled on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday. The match will be won by the player who first scores 6 1/2 points. A victory is worth a point, a draw is worth one-half point.

The victor will be the official challenger for the world chess championship, held by Boris Spassky of the Soviet Union. The title match will be played in April and May 1972.

Phil Esposito Leads Bruins Past Sabres

NEW YORK, Oct. 15 (UPI).—Defending scoring king Phil Esposito scored two goals and three assists while Linemate Wayne Cashman added two goals last night, leading the Boston Bruins to a 6-2 victory over the Buffalo Sabres in a National Hockey League game at Boston.

Esposito, who scored 76 goals last season, has four in three games this year despite a pulled groin muscle and closer guarding now that he is a marked man.

All four of his goals have come on backhanders. "I'm getting those backhand shots because they're not giving me time to get the forehand around," Esposito explained. "It's not by design, believe me."

North Stars 1, Canadiens 1
Minnesota's Tom Reid scored on a penalty shot in the third period at Bloomington, Minn., to give the North Stars a 1-1 tie with Montreal, the defending Stanley Cup champion.

Expos Acquire Lemaster

MONTREAL, Oct. 15 (UPI).—The Montreal Expos announced yesterday they have purchased the contract of 32-year-old left-handed pitcher Danny Lemaster from the Houston Astros for an undisclosed amount of cash. Last year, he pitched in 42 games, all in relief. He had an 0-3 win-loss record with one save and a 5.45 earned-run average.

Monetary Fight Reset

GENEVA, Oct. 15 (Reuters).—The European heavyweight championship fight due to take place here on Nov. 5 between titleholder Roger Mennestrey of France and Silvano Bertini of Italy has been postponed until Nov. 26, it was announced today.

Texas May Attempt to Spell Quarterback With 3d-Stringer

NEW YORK, Oct. 15 (UPI).—The Texas Longhorns are looking for a replacement for the quarterback they suffered at the hands of Oklahoma last Saturday. Oklahoma's powerful offense and defense increased the Texas injury list considerably so that there are now nine starters out of action. Coach Darrell Royal's Longhorns will go against Arkansas tomorrow with their third-string quarterback as the probable starter. That's going so far down the list that earlier this week Royal had trouble remembering how to spell the name of this quarterback—Bob Reviere.

The assignment for tailback Ed Marinaro and undrafted Cornell St. Harvard at Ithaca, N.Y., Marinaro is only 383 yards away from the national collegiate career rushing mark of 3,867 yards set by Steve Owen of Oklahoma. An average performance by Marinaro (214.7 yards) will put him within a game of the mark.

Just north of Ithaca, Lydell Mitchell and Penn State will try to remain undefeated as they go through their annual battle with Syracuse. Mitchell moved up to fifth spot in rushing last week as Marinaro kept the national lead.

Running, or a lack of it, will probably settle the Oklahoma-Colorado issue at Norman, Okla. The Sooners lead the nation in total offense and rushing offense.
